

Oakland County KidSpeak®

January 26, 2015

Oakland County Commissioners Auditorium

The Foster Care Alumni of America-Michigan Chapter, Michigan Youth Opportunity Initiative, Michigan's Children, Oakland County Board of Commissioners and the Park West Foundation, and our hosts, Oakland County Commissioner Janet Jackson and former Commissioner Mattie McKinney Hatchett, State Representative Jim Runestad and State Senator Dave Robertson were recently joined by more than three dozen more local, state and federal decision makers at the 2nd annual Oakland County KidSpeak®.

Eighteen young people currently or formerly served by the foster care system, spoke to the listeners about their challenges, and all made recommendations for changes in policies and programs to make the system work better for others.

- Young people asked for more stability – in their homes, in their schools and with the agency staff assigned to help them navigate their world.
- They asked for more and better resources to follow them further into adulthood to help with that transition.
- They asked for more and consistent opportunities to be involved in their own life planning, including on-going connections with their birth families.
- A recurring, and often heartbreaking theme through much of the testimony this year was about the barriers they had faced in their attempts to keep in touch with their siblings.

Current outcomes for young people who have been involved in the foster care system are unacceptable. While we are making strides in how we serve the young people under our guardianship, we are still not successful enough. Multiple sectors must work together to make sure that under our care, young people are better able to rebuild what has been lost and move successfully toward supporting themselves and their own families now and in the future.

KidSpeak® partners will be working with policymakers to move forward recommendations in all of these areas through 2015.

The young people who testified were supported by the following organizations:

KidSpeak® is a rare opportunity for decision makers to hear youth directly share their experiences with the child welfare system and foster care; the education system, including alternative paths to diploma; and homelessness, safety and violence. Connecting the experiences of young people directly with policymakers has provided firsthand knowledge of the challenges and opportunities and has proven to be an effective advocacy strategy. Their voices have changed the trajectory of policy conversation and have resulted in additional champions for youth-driven solutions in the Legislature, several Departments and other local policymaking bodies.

Michigan's Children Michigan's Children is the only statewide independent voice working to ensure that policymakers prioritize the needs of the most challenged children from cradle to career – children of color, children from low-income families, and children shouldering other challenging circumstances. We have been creating opportunities for young people to share their stories, concerns and suggestions directly with policymakers since 1996, and continues to find new ways to provide young people and the supporting adults around them the tools that they need to advocate on their own behalf.
