Supporting a Healthy Start in the Michigan State Budget

Michigan's Children Calls for Increased Funding for Early Intervention and Home Visiting

Michigan's newly-elected leadership are currently considering Governor Whitmer's recommendations and determining their own priorities for spending billions of one-time federal and state revenues for both current-year spending and for the 2023-2024 Fiscal Year which begins on October 1, 2023. Their choices could change the odds for children and families who continue to face hardships from years of public health and economic hardships.

The early years are critical for shaping the trajectory of a child's development. Families with young children are still reeling from years of isolation which has affected both their children's development and how much help parents have been able to easily access. Unfortunately, Michigan has historically underfunded home-based early intervention services and voluntary home visiting services.

This brief focuses on the School Aid budget. The home visiting funding from the School Aid budget is just a slice of overall state home visiting funding.

To improve families' access to comprehensive services for their young children's development, Michigan's Children supports:

- A $21 million funding increase for a total of $42 million to bring *Early On, Michigan's early intervention program for children aged 0-3 with developmental delays and disabilities closer to the overall need of $73 million.
- The Governor's proposed $2 million increase in state funds for voluntary home visiting programs, which would bring state funding for home visiting to $4.5 million. This investment would increase the number of families receiving services and bring Michigan closer to full investment in voluntary home visiting. We also support inflationary increases in all parts of the K-12 and DHHS budgets that support home visiting with those increases focused on workforce wages and retention.

Right Now: Governor Whitmer's executive budget proposes a $1 million increase for Early On which does not go far enough to meet current need. The House concurred with the Governor and the Senate proposed a $1.3 million increase.

The Governor also recommended a $2 million increase for voluntary home visiting programs, which would bring state funds for home visiting to $4.5 million. The House and the Senate concurred.

Why Invest in Early Intervention?

Early On Michigan connects families with service professionals who visit them at their homes to teach them skills for supporting their child's development at home, and connect them with resources like physical, occupational, and speech therapy to set up their child for success. Early On is available to families of all incomes. However, this critical public service has been chronically underfunded, forcing programs across the state to scrape together scarce local funding that often reflects the property values in their county. This leads to uneven service delivery where many kids are not receiving the frequency or types of services they need to thrive.

Since the pandemic, Early On programs across the state have received a record-high number of referrals while at the same time kids are being referred earlier and staying in the program longer. This has resulted in Early On serving the largest caseloads in the program's history. Meeting the statewide identified need of $73 million is more important now than ever to combat pandemic learning loss and trauma that children experienced during the pandemic. Full funding would allow all Intermediate School Districts (ISDs) to coordinate their efforts statewide for detecting developmental delays so fewer children fall through the cracks.

Why Invest in Voluntary Home Visiting?

Home visiting is a voluntary program for caregivers with infants and young children and people expecting babies. Home visitors teach families about positive parenting, healthy pregnancy, healthy child, and child growth and development. Home visitors also make the determination to connect families to resources related to developmental delays and disabilities (Early On), health, housing, food, child care, employment, domestic violence, and mental health.

Home visitors help parents develop effective parenting techniques and build knowledge of developmental stages. HV services are beneficial for the whole family and save taxpayer's money by ensuring that children build strong relationships with their caregivers, have access to doctor's visits, early screening for disabilities and delays, and other basic needs, and receive the emotional support that they need to thrive in adulthood. Home visiting provides wrap-around services for children's social, emotional, physical, and educational needs which reduces a child's future need for more costly services.
